American Academy of Forensic Psychology

The half-life of knowledge in forensic psychology is 7 years. Meaning, if you graduated 7 years ago, half of what you learned in graduate school either no longer applies or has been updated to reflect new science. To help with competence across the board, we've partnered with American Academy of Forensic Psychology (AAFP) to offer programs on special topics in forensic psychology, presented by leading experts.

The American Academy of Forensic Psychology is a non-profit organization of board certified forensic psychologists. Their mission is to contribute to the development and maintenance of forensic psychology as a specialized field of study, research, and practice.

American Board of Police and Public Safety Psychology

Particularly in the last couple years, police and public safety psychology has emerged as a major need. To meet this need, we've partnered with ABPPSP to offer a variety of programs geared at cultivating cultural competence, foundational knowledge, board certification preparedness, and more.

The American Board of Police and Public Safety Psychology (ABPPSP) has been a fully affiliated specialty board of the ABPP for more than 10 years. Police and Public Safety Psychology applies the science and profession of psychology in four primary domains of practice: assessment, clinical intervention, operational support, and organizational consultation.

-Dr. Kyle M. Clayton, Ph.D., ABPP, Board Certified in Forensic Psychology

"Having the downloadable source materials to study from was a huge advantage for my board certification tests, since I could review the content as many times as I needed. I don't know that I would have passed my boards without CONCEPT, since much of what I reviewed in those presentations were covered in my exam."

CONCEPT is the exclusive online training provider for professional organizations such as the American Academy of Forensic Psychology (AAFP) & the American Board of Police and Public Safety (ABPPSP).
